PERFECTLY HEARTLESS.

"Pretty! Yes, rather pretty, but perfectly heartless!" said Mrs. Holmes to Dr. Stanley, a young talented physician, with whom she was converbing, at a large and brilliant entertainment.

"Heartless with that sansitive mouth and those eyes so deep and full of expression?" said the physician, musing-what has long been obvious from the steady accumulation by Russia of an enormous military force during late years, from her progress southward to India, from her reported alliance with Persia, from the alliance she had sought with the western powers, from her concentration of large armies at points close upon the Turkish frontiers, and from the fact that she has employed the Sclav societies to foment the disturbances in the Turkish provinces, and from the singular character of her late diplomacy, is that she intended to seek a settlement of the Eastern question by a resent to arms. There forment the disturbances in the Turkish provinces, and, from the singular character of her late diplomacy, is that she intended to seek a settlement of the Eastern question by a resort to arms. There is no longer much hope that this appeal can be avoided, and hence a comparison of the forces and resources of the two chief combatants, and of those powers most likely to be drawn into the fray on one side or the other, is not without interest.

The area of the Russian empire in Europea and Asia extends over the seventh of the land surface of the globe. The European population, occupying an area of about 80,039 square miles, is 63,658,934. This does not include either Russian Poland, whose population is 5,705,607; Finland, with 1,843,245 inhabitants, or the Cancasus, 2,631,823 inhabitants, or the Ca on the sea of Arat. The total available strength of the navy is stated at about one hundred and twenty men of war, of which only twenty-nine are ironelads. The public debt of Russia is estimated at

The public debt of Russia is estimated at £250,962,000, of which 6.77,871,000 does not bear in/erest. Addet to this as a paper currency of £113,044,783. Both gold and silver are at a high premium.

The total war strength of the Terkish Government in 616,100. Militare service is made obligatory on all the Mahammedan population, the duration of which is twenty years, four of which are sount in the regular army and the rest in the various reserves. Only one religious division of the empire, the Mohammedan; is permitted to serve in the army, though men of other creeds are obliged to serve in the fleet when called on. chief naval commander, is an Englishman of decided ability.

In the Crimean war, twenty-three years ago, there was no telegraph when nor a mile of railroad in Tarkey. The first railroad was begun as lately as 1865. The country is now well covered with lines connecting all important points. From the ferocity and fanaticism of the Turkish character it is apprehended that if Tarkey triumphs there will not be enough Christians left in her dominions to quarrel over.

The financial condition of Turkey is bad. Her deficit last year was nominally £4,026,924. It will probably prove to be, on account of the insurrections in the pravinces, £7,500,000. The foreign debt of the empire is unwards of £185,000,000. Turkish securities of the test class have been reated in London and Liverpool with derision. The "internal" debt is placed by official figures at about £13,000,000, though the enomies of Turkey say it cannot fall falow £20,000,000. The financial resources of Turkey for ear purposes amount to nothing, though the fact that a much of her paper is held by Englishmen may lead, with other supposed English interests, to military assistance from England.

Here the military strength of the British Empire becomes a subject of interest. The total of the army of England is 850,-362, of which the regulars are 224,624, reserves, 320,421; Irish police, 12,000; Channel isles, 8,300; Indian army, 110,-137, and the indian police, 190,030. It is probable that a large proportion of the entire Indian forces would sympathize with the Sultan and his ally, although Russian agents are netive, and the prize of independence from British domination is tempting. It is unnecessary to add that the navy of Great Britain is the most powerful in the world.

The army of Persh, which is said to have formed an alliance with Russia, can farman at least seventy thousand men of all arms. Her geographical position enables her to render effective service to Russian in such a quarrei as the prescuiting as the particular in such a quarrei as the prescuiting as
